Financial Statement. It is recognised on all hands as a matter of primary importance, not only to the mercantile classes, but to the general body of the public; and not only because the revenue and expenditure must be adjusted at the earliest date, but because the credit of the colony must be maintained in the eyes of our financial critics in England. Whether or not the New Hebrides motion was prepared with a view to prevent the delivery of the Financial Statement on the day appointed, and to ensure the ultimate defeat of the Treasurer's proposals by raising a question more than likely to catch votes that otherwise might not be given against the Government, it certainly has that appearance. No one knew better than the mover that it would be impossible for the Government to go on with such a motion hanging over them. His own experience as a leader of the House has been signalled by his readiness to stop the public business when a hostile motion made its appearance on paper. It would not be too much to say that it has been his practice to do so. And no doubt there are plenty of precedents and a good deal of sound reason for it. Constitutional authorities tell us that a vote of censure is "a matter of vital concern" to a Government. It strikes at its very existence, and strikes in such a manner as to paralyse it for the time being. The mere wording of the motion is of little moment; it does not matter what sort of paper a bullet is wrapped in. The hon. member amused the House by declaring that he should not have the appearance of unnecessarily affecting the Government. It might not have the appearance, but it certainly had the effect; and it would seem that it was "studiously worded" so as to have the effect without having the appearance.

A glance at the words of this motion will show that the other horn of the dilemma is not less clear than the one we have referred to. If the House should undertake the responsibility of rejecting the motion, it would virtually endorse the policy of the Government as expressed in its cablegram—"New South Wales not disposed to take any steps to interfere with negotiations now taking place between Her Majesty's Government and the French Government respecting the New Hebrides." To endorse that policy would virtually mean the consent of New South Wales to the French annexation of the islands. Lord ROBERTS would then have before him something more than a bare cablegram from the Government; it would be a cablegram backed by a vote of the House, which of course would be taken to represent the public opinion of the colony. Now, as we have said elsewhere, there can be very little doubt that the public opinion of the colony points just the other way. No one can be blind to the fact that another French annexation would mean another convict depot. The very origin of the movement may be traced to the fact that New Caledonia is already overstocked, and that convicts who cannot be sent there must be sent somewhere else. Read in that light, no member of the House who values the welfare of the colony can hesitate to give his vote for the motion. The first paragraph declares "that any expression of acquiescence on the part of the Government in the annexation of the New Hebrides by France is opposed to the true interests of New South Wales and the other Australian colonies." That proposition is undeniable; nor can any attempt to complicate it by questions of French guarantees impose upon any one. The second paragraph asserts "that it is the duty of the colony to convey to the Imperial Government its disapproval of the colonisation of the New Hebrides by any Power other than Great Britain, whose subjects have been settled and have laboured in the cause of civilisation in those islands for nearly half a century." That proposition is equally clear and sound. It does not propose to raise international complications; it simply expresses disapproval of a French annexation, and, consequently, cannot raise any complication whatever.

But however desirable it may be that the public opinion of the colony on this question should make itself known to the Foreign Office at the earliest moment, and in the most unequivocal form, it is not expedient that the public business should be discontinued for the mere purpose of carrying a hostile motion. The House can extricate itself from the dilemma by resorting to the constitutional method for disposing of inconvenient motions. "The previous question" can be moved and carried without any sacrifice of public interest, and the way can be cleared at once for the Financial Statement. The policy of the Government on the New Hebrides question would neither be supported nor condemned by adopting that course, nor would the House commit itself to any expression of opinion on the subject. It would simply declare that the motion was not opportune under existing circumstances.

In another column we publish the correspondence which has taken place during the last few weeks between the PREMIER of Victoria and the Victorian AGENT-GENERAL and the PREMIER of the other colonies respecting the proposed annexation of the New Hebrides by France. At the close of the correspondence our readers will find the communications that passed between Mr. GILLIES and Sir PATRICK JENNINGS. The question was brought under the notice of the PREMIER by a telegram received from Mr. MURRAY SMITH during the last week in February. In this telegram it was stated that while Her Majesty's Government are determined to adhere to the pledge that nothing shall be done to change the position of the New Hebrides without consultation with the Colonial Governments, the French Ambassador had given his assurance that France would abolish transportation to the Pacific if she were allowed to annex the New Hebrides, and that Lord GRANVILLE had indicated a willingness to give the New Hebrides to France if the latter would consent to give the island of Repe to England. Mr. MURRAY SMITH's telegram was sent by the PREMIER of Victoria to the Governments of the other colonies, and to our Government amongst the rest. To such a communication, of course, some reply had to be given, and the question admitted of very little delay. Sir PATRICK JENNINGS cannot be charged with meddling with a business that did not concern him, nor do we think that this is a matter in regard to which we should have allowed the federating colonies to take their own course. In regard to the New Hebrides the colonies have always acted in concert, and it is a matter for congratulation that the assumptions of the Federal Council have not made united action impossible.

It may also be admitted that the motives of our Premier were excellent, and that at least plausible reasons might be given for the tenor of his reply. To this we may add that the communication of the PREMIER of New South Wales differs little, if at all, from that of the PREMIER of New Zealand. Mr. STOUT intimated that opposition to French annexation might be modified if France agreed to cede Repe, if she stopped sending convicts to the Pacific, and pledged herself to grant religious equality; and that is the drift of the reply of Sir PATRICK JENNINGS. It is true that Mr. STOUT's telegram to Mr. GILLIES was modified by a subsequent telegram to the New Zealand Agent-General, but the former was neither withdrawn nor explained away. Like our own Government, the Government of New Zealand does not forget that there is an Imperial as well as a colonial aspect to questions affecting the islands of the Pacific, and both are indisposed to unnecessarily embarrass the Home authorities. There has certainly been a good deal of wild talk at various times as to what we should do to keep the French out of the Pacific, and to keep foreigners out of the South Seas generally. No doubt it would be an excellent thing if the Pacific could be cleared of foreigners; but what if the foreigners themselves should differ from us on that point; and we need hardly say that they do differ very materially. We are told that in the matter of the New Hebrides Germany takes the side of France. Little as the two nations may agree in other things, here they are of one mind. Nor will inflammatory language of the kind that was used at St. Stephen's Church last week, and of the kind that is used in one or two parts of this correspondence, be calculated to divide them. On the contrary, it will bring them closer together. We know that it was the clamour for British annexation that was made three or four years ago that led to the demand for French annexation. The French, fearing, as indeed they had good reason for doing, that we might annex the islands, proposed to annex them themselves. In the cry for the annexation of this particular group we have never joined. Eight years ago Great Britain and France entered into an understanding to the effect that neither Power should annex the group, and Great Britain has done well to respect that understanding. If the business of the world is to go on nations must keep their engagements as well as individuals.

But if there are reasons why we should refuse to clamour for the annexation of the New Hebrides by Great Britain there are stronger ones for our refusing consent to their annexation by France. Some day no doubt so large and so desirable a group as the New Hebrides will be annexed by one or other of the Powers. The present status of the group cannot last for ever. Further, if Great Britain declines to take the islands—and we all know that in England there is a very strong feeling against any further annexations in the Pacific—we cannot complain if other people take them. But the question at present is not what is to be the future of the islands of the Pacific, or even of that of the New Hebrides group, but what shall be done with the understanding between England and France; and whatever may be the outcome of the debate of to-morrow night, we have no doubt that the general opinion in this colony is that if Great Britain cannot, or will not, annex the group, the understanding ought to be adhered to. For the sake of the Government the House may declare against the motion of Sir HENRY PARKES; but whatever the House may do, public opinion will be that in conveying that France might have the New Hebrides if she would give us Repe and pledge herself not to deport any more convicts to the Pacific, our Government acted most unwisely. There is no reason in the world why France should annex the New Hebrides, but every reason why she should not annex it. If the group is annexed at all it should be by Great Britain. The natives want the British, and they do not want the French, and so far as the islands have been civilised it has been by British energy and British capital. It may be said that the New Hebrides are contiguous to New Caledonia, but they are also contiguous to Fiji; and on geographical grounds, therefore, the French claim is no stronger than ours. As to the cession of Repe, a small and barren island of only 18 miles in circumference, if such an island were a compensation for the sacrifice of a large group of twenty or thirty islands, there is no evidence whatever that the French intend to part with Repe. On the contrary, it is intimated that they mean to keep the place. The only pledge they will make if we give them the New Hebrides is not to send any more convicts to the Pacific, and our Government attaches too much importance to such a pledge. The present French Government might keep it, but who can think that it would be kept by future Governments. Would a French Premier of the FERRY type be at all likely to consent to such a restriction on his freedom? Besides, what is France to do with the New Hebrides if she is not to send any more convicts to the Pacific? We regret to find that the Minister who did so much to compromise the British nation in regard to New Guinea is pursuing the same course in regard to the New Hebrides. Such tactics, instead of being encouraged, ought to be resisted. Our PREMIER has taken a wrong course. Previous Governments have protested against the giving of the New Hebrides to a foreign Power, and this is what the present Government should have done.

Mr. JESSE COLLINGS, who became suddenly known to fame a few months ago in connection with his celebrated motion in favour of "three acres and a cow," has lost his seat in the House of Commons. It has been generally supposed that the movement with which he was identified is one of very recent origin, and that it owes its existence to the Radical combination between Mr. ARDEN and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This, however, is a mistake. Not only the idea, but the actual development of it, may be traced back to a much earlier period than the appearance of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN as the champion of the agricultural labourer. In a work on the "Conditions of Social Well-being," by DAVID CUNNINGHAM, published in 1878, we are told that, although the state of the land laws practically prohibited the workman, or even the middle-class individual, from purchasing a plot of ground, a system of small allotments had then been extensively adopted in the agricultural districts. "By the census of 1871," it appeared that in the seventeen representative agricultural counties, there were 91,903 allotments detached from a cottage or house, in addition to the gardens or lands attached; and, as there were 201,903 farm labourers in those counties, it follows that a large proportion of these must already be in the occupation of a plot of ground. This system, it is said, was introduced in face of great opposition and in spite of powerful prejudice on the part of the landed proprietors, because it was supposed that the agricultural labourer would be apt to neglect his proper work if he were furnished with a piece of ground to cultivate for himself. The result, however, went to show that it had not. The scheme was adopted by the labourer without interfering with the discharge of his ordinary duties. The author referred to warmly advocates the system, and supports his argument by pointing to the happy condition of things in France, "where the contented cultivator tills his own land, depending on its produce alone." But it is a curious fact that while the system of small allotments has been so much favoured in England, it is now represented by French writers as actually breaking down.

It is reported that the City Council has made an agreement to give a travelling company the exclusive use of the Exhibition Building for several months. If it has so acted, the general opinion will be that it has made a mistake. As many people are aware, a deputation from one of our musical societies waited upon the Mayor a few weeks ago, and requested permission to erect soundboards and to make other improvements whereby the building would be greatly improved. At the same time, the deputation pointed out that the request was made because the Exhibition Building was the only hall in the city in which concerts on a large scale could be held. The Mayor acceded to the wish of the society as conveyed through the deputation, and the improvements were speedily effected. To a great extent they accomplished the purpose for which they were made, for they so regulated the movements of sound-waves in the building that both vocal and instrumental music could be rendered without risk of the effect being marred by echoes. Since the completion of the improvements two concerts have been held in the building, and the members and the lovers of music generally have been looking forward with pleasure to the entertainments which they expected to hold during the autumn and winter months. But the course which the Council has taken has dashed these expectations to the ground, and it is calculated to limit the operations, and therefore the usefulness, of the musical societies. No one will, of course, argue that the Council is not justified in making money out of the Exhibition Building; it is a duty they owe to the citizens to so manage the property that it shall be, if possible, a source of profit; but the Mayor and Aldermen must themselves see that the building should not be so disposed of as to prevent musical performances given by the people from the high-land Hall were in a condition to be let for popular purposes, they would not agree to give the exclusive use of it to any person for even a month; and, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, the principle that would influence them in dealing with the Centennial Hall should be followed. The Council should be made to understand that the convenience of the citizens is of far greater importance than a few additional pounds of revenue, and that the extra money obtained from the Exhibition Building by selling the exclusive use of the limited right to its use for a term will be dearly earned if the effect should be, as it must be, to shut out the hundreds of people from the high-land Hall who are the backbone of the Philharmonic, and other musical societies. We hope the City Council will modify the agreement into which they have entered so as to preserve to the societies referred to the privileges to which they are entitled, and which they had good reason to believe would not be taken away from them.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

REARDING affairs in Eastern Europe, we learn by cablegram that a conference of the Great Powers is to meet on Monday next to discuss the Bulgarian situation. A new Cabinet has been formed in Serbia, with M. Blatias as Premier. From this intelligence it is assumed that M. Garashanina, the late Premier, had resigned in consequence of the action taken by the Government in regard to the Bulgarian difficulty. The British and Austrian squadrons now stationed at Suda Bay, in the island of Crete, will shortly be reinforced with a view to the possible cession of Greece. The Oxford and Cambridge University Boat Race was rowed on the Thames on Saturday, and resulted in a victory for Cambridge, after an exciting contest.

The English mail per Orient Company's steamer Iberia was delivered in Sydney on Saturday afternoon. On her last voyage she carried a large number of English and other newspapers to the 28th February. The communications of our London and Paris correspondents will be found elsewhere. The latter contains a previs of the debate in the French Chamber on the Madagascar question.

THE first letter from our special correspondent in London on the Colonial and Indian Exhibition is published elsewhere. The exhibition, we are informed, is expected to draw a very large number of people, and there is every prospect of its success. A general idea is given of the exhibition, but the courts, when our correspondent wrote, were not in a sufficiently advanced state for description in detail.

It was stated on Saturday that the Britannia, by which the San Francisco mails of March 25 had been shipped, had broken down. According to a London telegram the mails had been sent on via Brindisi, while the London correspondence and the 28th instant. The latter was the correct information. The Postmaster-General at Sydney has received the following cablegram from the Agent-General in London:—"Frisco mails of 25th ultimo, per Britannia, delayed, owing vessel returning Queenstown disabled. Mails go by Adriatic to-morrow."

THE members of the Royal Commission on the Conservation of Water returned to Sydney on Saturday evening last, and the Victorian AGENT-GENERAL was engaged at Camden on Saturday morning in taking evidence, a synopsis of which will be found in another column.

BESIDES the catalogue of New South Wales exhibits, the last three shipments of printed matter forwarded by the Commission for distribution in the Indian and Colonial Exhibition included some thousands of copies of small pamphlets on the progress and resources of the colony, of which a new edition is being prepared, with articles revised by the leading public departments.

At the meeting of the council of the New South Wales Rifle Association, held on Friday evening, correspondence and telegrams were read from Victoria and South Australia upon the subject of sending a united Australian rifle team to England. The Victorian Government has promised £1000 towards defraying the expenses of the team, and the Victorian Rifle Association is seeking the co-operation of the New South Wales Rifle Association in the matter. The council of the New South Wales Association, while fully agreeing in the desirability of sending a team of riflemen to England, will be unable to do anything without the aid of the Government, and they have appointed a deputation to wait upon the Colonial Secretary to ask him for the necessary sanction.

Mr. T. H. O'Connell, the Sydney accountant of the Newcastle Steamship Company, being about to enter into business in Brisbane, was the recipient of a testimonial from his brother-officers and friends in the company on Saturday morning. The presentation was made by the manager, Mr. H. D. Portus, who testified to the worth of Mr. Chandler and the esteem in which he was held by his brother-officers afloat and ashore, and expressed the wish that Mr. Chandler would devote the same energy to his new business as he had done to his former one. The testimonial was a handsome one, and was presented by the company's manager, Mr. Skinner, supplemented the manager's remarks.

and, as a brother-officer with Mr. Chandler from the day the company was formed, spoke of his many good qualities, and wished him every success in the undertakings he was going to embark in. Mr. Chandler very feelingly responded, and his friends then accompanied him to the Leura station and wished him bon voyage.

An old man named Thomas Ryan was admitted to the Sydney Hospital on Saturday evening, suffering from serious injuries to the head, which the patient stated he had received while engaged in a very peculiar condition.

YESTERDAY afternoon, in St. Andrew's Cathedral, the Primate delivered an address on special religious instruction in Public schools. The address is published in another column. Previous to the commencement of the service, a printed statement to the following effect was distributed amongst the congregation:—"There are 317 schools in the diocese of Sydney, with a total enrolment of about 81,000 Church of England children. Twenty-two of the clergy visit certain of these schools. But it is quite impossible for them to do all the work, owing to the large number of children in the city and suburban schools, necessitating several classes; and the scattered nature of the country schools. The committee employs 11 of the salaried teachers to aid the clergy, and they teach 159 classes weekly. An expenditure is thereby incurred at the rate of £1000 per annum. Nine months of the financial year have elapsed, and the amount received up to the present date is only £330. The committee earnestly appeal to their fellow-churchmen for a large addition to their funds. In the work itself they have much encouragement, and many proofs of its value. There is still a large number of children who have not been reached by the clergy or the salaried teachers. Funds are also urgently needed to meet the cost of the prices distributed in December last."

His Excellency the Governor has consented to preside at the 30th annual meeting of the Church Society, which has been fixed for the 5th May next.

On Sunday evening the Rev. Dr. Gledhill delivered a sermon at St. John's Church, Paddington, on the proposed French annexation of the New Hebrides, and the duty of the Australian Churches in relation to the question. The reverend gentleman dwelt very strongly upon the evil results which would follow the annexation of the islands by France, not only in regard to the interests of the Australian colonies, but the missionary labours which for years had been progressing in the group. He considered that the people of Australia had a right to be heard upon this question, and he urged that the colonies, by united action in the matter, should show the Imperial Government that they were alive to the danger which menaced them, and that they were ready to stand up for the principles of Christianity and civilisation in the New Hebrides, as well as the native themselves. A report of the sermon will be found elsewhere.

THE Rev. Dr. Jelfer, who some months since delivered a series of lectures on "Spenser's Life," commenced, in the Pitt-street Congregational Church, last evening, a course on "Bachelor Life," dealing particularly with "Home and Lodgings." A report of the lecture appears in another portion of this issue.

THE cornerstone of a new Roman Catholic church school was laid at Brookwood yesterday afternoon by Cardinal Moran, who delivered an address, which was principally upon the subject of education. The sum of £230 was collected, inclusive of a donation of £50 from Cardinal Moran. The building is to cost £1400, towards which amount the sum of £380 has been raised.

A TELEGRAM from Richmond announces the death of Mrs. Town, widow of the late Mr. William Town, and mother of Mr. Andrew Town. The funeral is to take place at 12 o'clock to-morrow.
